

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

iota lessen the vast aggregate of our losses in life and treasure. We have been wont to look upon the English as the most heavily taxed people in the world; but their income tax, as fair an index as any other, is only half as great as ours. We doubt whether any other nation is so heavily taxed as ours; and the time is coming when they will become restive and impatient, perhaps mutinous under the burden.

ENGLISH FINANCES. — Robert Lowe, Chancellor of the Exchequer, recently submitted his annual Budget. The estimates made by the Hon. George W. Hunt, his predecessor in office, were £73,000,000, while the receipts were £72,500,000, leaving a deficit of £500,000, which had to be met this year. He (Mr. Lowe) estimated the expenditures of the present fiscal year at £68,250,000, showing a reduction of £2,250,000 from the estimated expenditures of last year, which was gained chiefly in the Admiralty and War Office. He estimated the revenue of the present fiscal year at £73,000,000. The expense of the Abyssinian war was £9,000,000, of which £7,000,000 were expended in India. The country had still £4,000,000 of the amount to pay. The surplus of the present year would just balance the Abyssinian and the general deficit. Under the circumstances, said the Chancellor, it is desirable to raise a further sum by taxation. He regarded the present means of collection as expensive and unsatisfactory, and said its only warrant was in its antiquity. He proposed to collect the assessed taxes by means of excise licenses. The income tax is to be collected in the same manner. By these measures, £3,250,000 will be brought into the financial year in addition to the amount heretofore collected. Out of this amount he proposed a reduction of a penny upon the income tax, to repeal the import duty on coin and the fire insurance duty, and to rearrange several smaller items. This will give a decrease of £3,000,000, and will leave nearly £500,000 clear surplus.

This budget, though for England quite unusually favorable, still shows how much more is war to cost than its abettors expected. That in Abyssinia was estimated by some, we believe, at only $10,000,000, by none more than $25,000,000, but it is now admitted to have cost $45,000,000.

ABYSSINIAN WAR. — Its cost to England is reported as £9,000,000, or $45,000,000. Paying pretty dear for such a whistle.

AUSTRIA DEEPER IN DEBT. — Her recent budget shows a deficiency of 3,000,000 florins, and for years her expenses have been running beyond her income. A virtual confession of national bankruptcy.

GREAT PUBLIC WORKS — Their tendencies to the world's peace. — The removal of natural barriers between nations, whether material or moral, and the overcoming of obstacles, to the free intercourse of all men, seem to be a principal part of the mission of the present age. The Chinese wall of political seclusion has been broken down, and that which still encloses Japan has begun to crumble. The Atlantic Ocean has been bridged for human thought, and all other oceans and seas will soon be traversed by the same inverted arch. Three great channels of international communication are rapidly approaching completion. The Pacific Railroad, traversing a distance of more than 3000 miles, connecting two great oceans, and costing more than $200,000,000, promises to be completed the present year. The railroad tunnel through Mont Cenis, connecting Italy with France, begun in 1860, has, in spite of extraordinary and unforeseen obstacles, advanced between four and five miles of the seven and a half miles which constitute its entire length, and will probably be completed within three years at the longest. The Suez Canal, connecting the Mediterranean and the Red Seas, and wide enough for the largest ships, is said to be within a few months of its completion.

The success of these great works will stimulate to still bolder enterprises. A ship canal across the Isthmus of Darien, to connect the Atlantic and Pacific at the point of their nearest approach, as the great railroad will connect them at the point of their widest divergence, cannot be long delayed. A submarine cable across the broad Pacific, connecting the oldest and most populous with the youngest and most progressive of the continents, already begins to be talked of, and will no doubt be in actual operation within less than ten years. The Russian Czar is said to be projecting a railroad across the whole width of his vast domains, to connect the Baltic with the Sea of Kamtschatka. And it cannot be long before England will secure, what rival theorists have already for many years been contending about, a continuous railroad communication with her Indian Empire. Whether it be from the eastern shore of the Mediterranean, up the valley of the Orontes, across to the Euphrates, down the valley of that river to the Persian Gulf, and then along the coast-line to Hindostan, or by some other route, this great work must ere long be done, for it is demanded by the necessities of increasing travel, and is required for the security of the British Possessions in India.

What mighty changes these and other similar communications are destined to produce in the world! They will give an incalculable impulse to commerce. They will be powerful promoters of peace, magnifying and multiplying all the interests which are opposed to war as the great waster and destroyer, and intensifying those friendly sentiments which travel, trade and intercourse produce. They will powerfully tend to assimilate men to each other, to modify peculiarities of character and custom, and make one neighborhood of all the world.

Let the Christian philosopher, then, consider what is to be the moral significance and value of these inevitable changes in the relations of men to each other. Will all this be for good or for evil? Will it tend to make men better, or to make them worse? Will it advance or retard the progress of Christ's kingdom? Will it tend to the salvation of souls, or to their perdition? One thing seems certain; this bringing of all men so much nearer together must greatly increase the power of the influences that mould character in the mass. If Christianity be in fact, as we fully and joyfully believe, the prevailing moral power in human society, the most vigorous, the most aggressive, the most potent, the most enduring of all the moral forces in the world, then it would seem that Christianity must be the gainer by these changes. Let us see that ours be such a Christianity, and then we have nothing to fear.

ROLAND.

A REMARKABLE SPEECH FROM A WAR-MINISTER. — A most notable sign of the direction of public opinion and one in the highest degree encouraging to those who have long labored for the promotion of peace, and a Christian policy of international diplomacy, is afforded by the speech of Hon Capt. Vivian. M. P., the War Lord of the Treasury, delivered at Truro, December last on the occasion of his reelection. In setting forth the programme of measures incumbent upon the new ministry, he concluded by saying. Lastly, they had a gigantic task, and one which would probably take more than a lifetime to accomplish, but which he was sanguine enough to hope he might see carried out, — it was that by the influence of England they might induce the great nations of the earth to see the folly of keeping up the bloated armaments which are battenning on the blood of the people. For the arbitrament of war they might substitute an understanding that, while they should not interfere in the domestic affairs of other nations, all differences which might arise between nation and nation should be referred to the arbitration of a Peace Congress. When that day came, and he would repeat his belief that it would come, instead of spending 26 millions sterling a year in military armaments, we should be able to reduce our military establishments to a peace footing, and bring down the expenditure to something like ten millions per annum. Then might they expect to see the hopes of Mr. Bright realized — “a free breakfastable for the working-man.”

HOWARD AT ATLANTA.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

Right in the track where Sherman
Ploughed his red furrow,
Out of the narrow cabin,
Up from the cellar's burrow,
Gathered the little black people,
With freedom newly dowered,
Where, beside their Northern teacher,
Stood the soldier, Howard.

He listened and heard the children
Of the poor and long enslaved
Reading the words of Jesus,
Singing the songs of David.
Behold! the dumb lips speaking,
The blind eyes seeing!
Bones of the Prophet's vision
Warmed into being!

Transformed he saw them passing
Their new life's portal;
Almost it seemed the mortal
Put on the immortal.
No more with beasts of burden,
No more with stone and clod,
But crowned with glory and honor
In the image of God!

There was the human chattel
Its manhood taking;
There, in each dark, bronze statue,
A soul was waking!
The man of many battles,
With tears his eyelids pressing,
Stretched over those dusky foreheads
His one-armed blessing.

And he said: “Who hears can never
Fear for or doubt you:
What shall I tell the children
Up North, about you?”
Then ran round a whisper, a murmur,
Some answer devising;
And a little boy stood up: “Massa,
Tell 'em we're rising!”

O black boy of Atlanta!
But half was spoken:
The slave's chain and the master's
Alike are broken.
The one curse of the races
Held both in tether:
They are rising, all are rising,
The black and white together!

O brave men and fair women!
Ill comes of hate and scorning:
Shall the dark faces only
Be turned to morning? —
Make Time your sole avenger,
All-healing, all-redressing;
Meet Fate half-way, and make it
A joy and blessing!

THE PRESS OF THE UNITED STATES. — A recent statistical publication says that in the United States there are 542 daily papers, 4425 weekly, 277 monthly; total 5244. The number of printing offices exceeds 6000. In addition there are 56 tri-weekly papers, 63 semi-weekly, 46 semi-monthly publications, 297 monthly, 4 bi-monthly, and 24 quarterly, making the total number of all American publications 5734, or, of newspapers proper, a total of 5358.

What an array is here of moral forces! More than 5,000 periodical papers operating incessantly on some thirty-six million minds in this country! Were all these, or three-quarters of them, to unite in a determined, persistent assault upon any great wrong, or any evil custom, could it long stand before such a moral cannonading? Let them open their batteries upon the practice of war, detailing its horrid facts, exposing its suicidal folly, and showing how its vast and terrible evils might be averted by peaceful expedients for securing the safety, rights and interests of nations; and might they not very soon put an end to all actual war in Christendom?

ANNIVERSARY. — The Annual Address before the American Peace Society is to be delivered by Rev. A. A. MINER, D. D., President of Tufts College, Sabbath evening May 23, in the School Street Church.

The Annual Meeting for business will be held at the Society's rooms, 40 Winter Street, May 26, 3 P. M.

WM. C. BROWN, Rec. Sec.

SPECIAL REQUEST. — Our Society, within the last six months, has greatly enlarged its scale of operations. Instead of its solitary Cor. Secretary, it has already commissioned, chiefly at the West, no less than twenty-three Lecturing Agents, and ten Local Agents. Besides a much larger issue of the Advocate, we have already stereotyped three volumes, and published more of our stereotyped tracts and volumes than for a dozen years before.

Now, we are very anxious to continue largely this increase of our operations, and must or fail in our duty to the great cause we have in charge. We ask, as we deeply need, the advice, sympathy and encouragement of our best friends in this emergency. Our increased operations we have undertaken without any special increase of contributions from our friends, but of course cannot continue them long without larger means. In the publishing department alone we need not less than $10,000. In this emergency we ask our most reliable friends to be present at our annual business meeting for a special interchange of views. If they cannot come, will they in season send us their views? We must secure soon some reliable basis to sustain these enlarged operations; and one friend, seeing the urgency of the case, stands ready to pledge $1000 a year for five years, if other friends will increase the amount to $13,000 a year for that time.